

Consultant Biography

John Slack, MBA, PMP Principal Consultant

John Slack is a Principal Consultant at Advanced Management Services, Inc. (AMS), a full service management consultancy servicing an international client base.

John has over 30 years of experience in business development and project management. For the past decade he has focused his time on a mixture of active project management and the development for project management training.

His projects have ranged from the retail to high tech sectors including the planning and rollout of business strategy for companies such as Digital Equipment Corp and Intel, to the development and rollout of software applications for companies such as DirectTV, Motorola and American Airlines.

John has developed and delivered project management training in a number of areas. The courses have included basic project management, advanced project management, risk management, effective negotiation and project management for team members as well as overviews for senior management. The venues for training delivery have included companies such as Sanmina-SCI, The Weather Channel, HP, the IRS as well as schools such as Babson College and Bentley College.

John's management experience has ranged from large companies such as United Brands and Digital Equipment Corp to small start-ups such as Software International & The Cushing Group. He has published a number of articles as well as one book on business process analysis, "Business Architecture Methodology, an approach to planning and control."

He has an MBA from Northeastern University and a BS from the University of Massachusetts. He is an AMS certified trainer.